EXTRACTS.

MAUDE.

I sit in the shadow and dream, Maude,
While you sit in the sunshine and play,
And to pity and whining you seem, Maude,
That you gladden my spirit to-day;
Above you the skylark is singing,
And the mellow thrush warbles below,
Where you feet pass the daisies are springing,
And the butter-cups are all in bloom.

What a charming existence you live, Maude,
Away from life's turmoil and wild,
But there's nothing on earth I could give, Maude,
To partake of your peace, little girl,
The future seems clouded before you,
For the present has never a care;
And you know in your heart we adore you,
Little Queen, as you grow dearer.

But I think your childhood is over
And this sweetness of girlhood is past,
In the future a passionate love,
Will with little Maude at last.
I know that your voice will grow tender,
As you speak with your lover that day;
And the brown eyes will shine with new splendour,
And confess what the heart cannot say.

I can fancy how bright you will make, Maude,
The home you consent to adorn;
And I trust the proud world will seek, Maude,
Will require not your love with its scorn.
But, Maude, the love is so hollow,
And those we could call our friends;
But I trust in the years that will follow,
Your friends may be many and true.

Oh! darling, how touching and pretty,
I know you will shortly appear;
When you ride in your brougham in the city,
No lady will rival you there.
But my heart is a captive already,
Enraptured in your letters it lies,
And my pulses are beating tenderly,
Sweetened by the light of your eyes.

THE LESSON OF A SNEEZE.

As a rule, a sneeze is the warning notice given that some part of the body is exposed to a cooler temperature than the other parts, that the sneezer is "catching cold." Next to the warning, what is the use of a sneeze? It throws open the pores of the whole body, and induces a gentle perspiration in a word it throws out the cold. A child rarely sneezes more than twice—perspiration is readily induced in a youth; an old man, on the contrary, sneezes half-a-dozen to a dozen times with a loud "catching cold." It is harder to set him perspiring. When one is sitting by an open window, and the wind is sneezing, nature tells him he is taking cold. He should get up instantly, walk about, and take a full tumbler of cold water to keep up gentle perspiration that the sneeze sets in motion. If he does this, he will not be telling an hour after, that he has a "cold in his head," or chest, or lungs.—Eastern Gazette.

"THE CIRCULATING MEDIUM."

Mr. Brown kept boarders. Around his table sat Mr. Brown, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Andrews, the table milliner, Mr. Black, the baker, Mr. Jordan, a carpenter, and Mr. Hadley, a flour, feed, and lumber merchant. Mr. Brown took out of his pocket-book a ten dollar note, and handed it to Mrs. Brown, saying, "Here, my dear, are ten dollars towards the twenty I promised you." Mrs. Brown handed it to Mrs. Andrews, the milliner, saying, "That pays for my new bonnet." Mrs. Andrews said to Mr. Jordan, as she handed him the note, "That will pay you for your work on my counterpane." Mr. Jordan handed it to Mr. Hadley, the flour, feed, and lumber merchant, requesting his lumber bill. Mr. Hadley gave the note back to Mr. Brown, saying, "That pays ten dollars on board." Mr. Brown passed it to his wife, with the remark that that paid her twenty dollars he had promised. She in turn paid it to Mr. Black, to settle her bread and pastry account, who handed it to Mr. Hadley, wishing credit for the amount on his flour bill, he came returning it to Mr. Brown with the remark that it settled for that month's board. Whereupon Brown put it back into his pocket-book, exclaiming that he "never thought a ten-dollar bill would go so far." This ten-dollar greenback was made by five minutes' judicious shuffling inside of five minutes. Who says greenbacks are worthless.—Los Angeles Spectator.

THE GEORGIANS.

It is a joke among the Russians that every Georgian is a noble, and the only title of nobility is Prince, the office of a Russian earl of hearing all sorts of obscure people, country postmen, drosky-drivers, some times even servants, described as being Princes So-and-so, is at first grotesque. This at least may be said for the numerous nobility that although it is both rare and frivolous, it does not despise the most occupations. Everyone has heard of the Georgian beauties, who in the estimation of Turkish importers, rivalled or surpassed those of Circassia itself. Among them a great many handsome and even some beautiful faces may certainly be seen, regular and finely-chiselled features, a clear complexion, large and liquid eyes, an elegant carriage, in which there is a good deal of dignity as well as of voluptuousness. To a taste, however, formed upon Western models, mere beauty of features and figure, without expression, is not very interesting; and these faces have seldom any expression. They want even that vivacity which in the partial case of the women of Andalusia partly redeems the absence of intelligence. They are admirable as pieces of Nature's handiwork, but not as human beings. A Turk may think them perfect; but it may be doubted whether anyone who had seen the ladies of Cork or Baltimore would take much pleasure in their society. However, this is a point on which people will disagree to the end of time; and those who hold that it is enough to look at a beauty without feeling inclined to talk to her, need not go beyond Georgia to find all they can wish. It must be remembered, however, that this loveliness is rather fleeting. Towards middle life the complexion is apt to become sallow, and the nose and chin rather to prominence, while the vivacity of look remains. One is told that the women are, as indeed the whole nation is, almost uneducated, with nothing but the pettiest personal interests to their thoughts or animate their lives. The men are sufficiently good-looking and pleasing in manner, with a certain grace and refinement in their countenances, at least in those of the lowlands. They do not strike one as a patting race, either physically or otherwise, with any force before it; nor have they ever preceded a great man, or done anything considerable in history, although they have had civilization and Christianity, after a sort, ever since the third or fourth century of our era. They belong of course to the Orthodox Eastern Church, and are now in full communion with the Church of Russia; which indeed they may be said to be a branch, though their liturgy differs little in some points. During the earlier middle ages I suspect that they were more influenced by heterodox Armenians than by Constantinianism, and their ecclesiastical alphabet, for they have two, is taken from the Armenian. Of their number it is difficult to form an estimate. It can hardly exceed 500,000 souls, and may be considerably less.—Cornhill.

JAPANESE FOLK LORE.

THE FOX WITH NINE TAILS.

In the north of Japan is the province of Shimane, which is about 120 years ago, was a large, uninhabited plain, covered by places with low but thick bushes. This plain is supposed to have been the abode of the first fox that ever set foot in Japan. It was a very large female fox, with a white face, bright yellow hair, and nine enormous tails, and was a very wonderful fox.

Tradition says that, about 8,000 years ago, this same female fox lived in China, where her depredations were of such a notorious character as to spread terror among the people; but at length she disappeared, and there were then great rejoicings. Some nine hundred years after this, she migrated to India, and was seen in various parts of that country; after which, it is said, she contrived by some means to come over to Japan, and transformed herself into a very beautiful lady. For a long time she maintained her human incognito, but eventually a clever man by the name of Abe Yaschiki, discovered that this beautiful lady was none other than the notorious abandoned fox of China. For some reason or other this man had, doubted the lady being one of the human species, and suspected that she was a fox. At length he determined to find out and appealed to the gods, praying that, if she was a fox, she might resume her natural condition. Instantly this lady was turned into a fox, and nine long tails and nine long ears, as the large plain mentioned above.

Now after this event some of the residents of the plain disappeared soon mysteriously. Nobody knew where they had gone or what had become of them. Hence there was much anxiety and consternation among the people, and the fox was held to be the cause of it. When one of the foxes was brought into the village, some men, or some daughter, some father or mother, were not to be found, and at length the rumour spread like wildfire that the nine-tailed fox had seized them and eaten them up. There was great lamentation. What was to be done? Who would be the next victim?

At last a man named Nasu Hachiro, mayor of the village, announced his willingness to hunt this fox if any of his neighbours would assist him. Volunteers were soon forthcoming, and the party having equipped themselves for a hunting expedition, started to find and kill the fox. They were highly elated as they set forth on this undertaking, and anticipated a successful issue would attend their efforts, but they were doomed to disappointment. Their search throughout the vast plain lasted three days and three nights, at the end of which they returned home tired and weary, having captured a plenty of deer and monkeys, but having been unable to discover the whereabouts of the fox.

Now for two or three years after this, but few people were missed, and but little anxiety was taken to their disappearance. After that time had elapsed, however, rumours of the presence being carried away by the nine-tailed fox became more numerous. A number of the villages were consequently coming for the purpose of devising some scheme for ridding the country of the troublesome fox, whose depredations were carrying mourning into almost every house; and it was resolved that the mayor should be the leader of another expedition. No time was lost in getting out the hunters, and they started full of hope and glad to see the hunters had done, on a previous occasion. They marched into the large plain of Nasu-no-Baru, fully determined to find and kill the man-eating animal, which had taken away so many of the friends and relatives. They hunted perseveringly for three days and nights, but could find no fox, though they came across a spot where she had evidently lived; for several of these places were numerous skulls and bones of human beings. As their search had been so fruitless, the hunters returned home thoroughly disheartened. A council of the elders of the village was held, at which the mayor presided, to see what had better be done for the fox still took the people away, and yet they could never see the animal. As this consultation it was resolved that a deputation, consisting of the mayor and some other local celebrities, should undertake a journey to the capital, and lay the whole matter before the Government, and solicit its protection against the incursions of this formidable and wicked animal.

Every preparation was made for a lengthy journey, for the capital was distant from the village 154 ri, and the deputation started after a weary journey of some days they arrived safely at the capital, and at once proceeded to relate their remarkable story to the authorities, who were very much astonished and at once agreed to their request. It was decided to equip and send a large expedition under the leadership of two very brave men, named Minamoto and Katsunuma. The army, which consisted of 50 samurai, 900 hunters and a very large number of dogs, marched to the plain of Nasu-no-Baru, which was suggested by 800 of the inhabitants of the surrounding country with the mayor at their head. The army was further reinforced by the arrival of 100 mounted samurai and a number of peasants, all armed with bows and arrows, spears, and swords. The total force amounted to 1,650 men, all told. Temporary barracks were constructed and preparations made for a lengthy stay, for they were determined that the fox should not escape this time.

On the 25th of the 5th month, all preparations being completed, this immense army of hunters and soldiers marched on their errand. Such a large hunt was never known before, and probably never will be again; balls were rung; drums were beat; every article that could make a noise was brought into requisition, and the yelling of the numerous army of dogs which had accompanied the hunters added to the racket. This clamour was intensified at night by the cracking and loud glare of numberless fires which were lighted. Indeed the whole plain seemed to be in a blaze, and the hunters passed from bush to bush, and from tree to tree, with great speed. For three days and three nights the hunt was kept up with unremitting vigilance, but to the great disappointment of the hunters, no fox was found, though traces of the animal were numerous enough.

But the morning of the fourth day they were more fortunate. The resources of the cunning fox had come to an end. Her expedient to elude the vigilance of her pursuers, the smoke of the numerous fires, which a party of hunters were peering about some bushes out jumped this monster that they had been looking for so long and so perseveringly. She was an enormous brute, covered with long yellow hair and had nine tails which had made her so conspicuous, and which were now visible to the hunters. Her appearance was so terrible and so magnificent, that the hunters were all struck with awe. They looked like coals of fire as she glared fiercely upon the hunters. With one bound she sprang in amongst them, seized one bound and another, and then she seized a great man, or done anything considerable in history, although they have had civilization and Christianity, after a sort, ever since the third or fourth century of our era. They belong of course to the Orthodox Eastern Church, and are now in full communion with the Church of Russia; which indeed they may be said to be a branch, though their liturgy differs little in some points. During the earlier middle ages I suspect that they were more influenced by heterodox Armenians than by Constantinianism, and their ecclesiastical alphabet, for they have two, is taken from the Armenian. Of their number it is difficult to form an estimate. It can hardly exceed 500,000 souls, and may be considerably less.—Cornhill.
